The Exquisite Pleasure of Falling. "When my time comes to cross the river I hope to be killed by a fall," said Dr. B. C. Smith. "It is a beautiful death, and the victim passes from time to eternity as sweetly and painlessly as an infant falling asleep. The old Ro-man method of execution by hurling from the Tarpein rock was much pre-ferable, from a humanitarian point of view, to electrocution, be the latter ever so sudden. I have had several falls in my life that, according to all lails in my life that, according to all accepted traditions, should have proved fatal. I once had a series of falls down the steep side of a mountain, bounding twenty to forty feet at a time, and, strange to say, I did not lose consciousness. I realized perfectly well what was happening to me. I knew that I was getting horribly bruised and that bones were snapping in various parts of my anatomy, but I experienced no pain whatever. I rather enjoyed the bouncing, and regarded the probability getting of killed as a comparatively trifling matter. When I finally came to a full stop I lay in a dreamy state for a few moments, then drifted into uncon-

sea of gold. When a man has a limb broken by a fall he does not know it until he attempts to rise. He may suspect that all is not well with him, but, to save That we are constantly adding to our stock; that every day we have a new lot of goods to arrive, and that One Prices are Lover than Washington.
